About Healthy Buildings 2020

'Healthy Buildings in a Climate Emergency'

We are in the midst of a global climate emergency, recognised in the UK by Parliament and over 150 local authorities. Across the construction industry, over 700 organisations and counting have made declarations, including major architecture and engineering practices, universities and NGOs. But what are the next steps?

It's clear that cross-sector collaboration is needed to develop a detailed and ambitious plan to address the climate emergency and help meet net zero targets for operational and embodied energy in buildings.

But what will this mean for our daily lives and how will this affect the way in which we design, construct, maintain and operate our buildings?

How do we change our behaviour as an industry and will the climate emergency provide a once-in-a-generation opportunity for architects, designers and product manufacturers to raise their game en masse and change the way we live and work forever?

Please join us for the ASBP's 4th Healthy Buildings Conference and Expo where we'll be joined by a number of inspirational speakers to discuss the radical, energy and resource efficient approaches that are required to fix the climate crisis and deliver healthier, lower carbon buildings with better indoor environments.
